

CHARGES AGAINST PRES. LEWIS

Intimation That He Packed the Miners' Convention Causes Long Wrangle.

Indianapolis, Jan. 19.—Charges of packing the convention in his own interest were made against President Tom Lewis in the miners' national convention today and for several hours the wrangle was continued in spite of attempts to bring about an orderly discussion.

It is the old fight that was made against Lewis last year and came up again over the presence of sixty paid organizers in the convention as delegates. The enemies of Lewis contended that these men, being in the regular pay of the organization, ought not to receive pay as delegates to the convention but Lewis and his friends defended them with their votes and carried the day.

The national officers submitted their reports this afternoon that the president being among them. He showed that the total membership of the organization is now 625,274 and felicitated his hearers on the fact that the organization had increased in membership in spite of the panic of last year.

CHARGES OF CORRUPTION MADE AT ALBANY

SPECIAL TO THE NEWS.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 19.—There will be an investigation by a senate committee at once of the charge made by Senator Ben Conger that he saw a man pay Senator John P. Aldrich money to defeat certain bridge highway legislation in 1901 when both were members of the state assembly. The names of other members of the legislature, some living and some dead, will be brought into this controversy before the inquiry is ended, if Senator Conger is compelled to stand by his statements.

Whether this investigation will be held by the judiciary committee or a special committee will depend upon developments over night. The idea now is to have the judiciary committee conduct the inquiry.

MORNING NEWS ADS ARE BUSINESS GETTERS

The Following is Taken from a Pamphlet Issued by the State Board of Health:

Gradual loss of weight should make a person suspicious, and should cause him to seek the best medical aid for careful physical examination for evidence of consumption. This is especially the case if in addition to the loss of weight, there is a loss of appetite with increased frequency of heart beat, afternoon fever and morning cough.

"In the consumptive the temperature often falls below the normal (98.6) in the morning, and frequently rises to 100 in the evening. It would be well, therefore, for a person who suspects he has consumption, to take his temperature morning, noon and evening for several days and make a record of it, which will be of value to the physician whom he consults.

"Hemorrhage from the lungs, following or associated with any of these more or less characteristic symptoms, will point with reasonable certainty to the existence of consumption.

"Any or all of these symptoms should cause the patient to seek at once the most competent advice.

"Unfortunately, many consumptives fail to heed the advice given them. This is especially true in the earlier stages of the disease, when the patient, instead of availing himself of a method of cure, spends a goodly portion of his time in trying to persuade himself, his friends, and even his physician, that an error has been made in his case, brought out by the symptoms presented, by a physical examination of the lungs, and a bacteriological examination of the sputum, counts but little. This is unfortunate, not only for the consumptive, but for the people at large."
